THE FOCUS

Designers turn their minds to new ways of working

As we navigate our way through the events of recent months, many of us have had to make adjustments – both big and small. Millions of workers, while lucky to have the option, have been forced to work remotely; setting up a makeshift desk in the corner of bedroom, tapping away on a laptop around the kitchen table, all while checking what's in view when on a video conference call. The concept of working from home certainly isn't a new one, however, will it become 'the new norm' – and how will our homes need to adapt? Designers are ahead of the game and rethinking furniture to meet this alternative working life.

THE MATERIAL

Frosted glass is the biggest story in lighting

This year, lighting design is all about glass and its treatment. Whether frosted, mottled, fluted or rounded, all are in beautifully soft translucent hues. Just as traditional stained glass was designed to evoke a sense of wonder, the modern day equivalent creates a cool and serene atmosphere for the home.
