

Even further ahead of the curve

Rounded silhouettes are absolutely staying for 2025 – but they're far smarter now

Of everything we saw in Milan last year, Gallotti&Radice's refreshed showroom – more on that in our editor's interview with Arianna Lelli Mami of architecture and design studio Studiopepe on page 44 – was a real highlight, and we can't wait to see what the brand has cooked up for 2025. But in the meantime, it delivered another dose of interiors inspiration in Paris in January, adopting a Haussmannian apartment and reimagining it in partnership with Silvera, infusing it with the elegance and craftsmanship that Gallotti&Radice is known for. We loved this vignette in the bedroom, the curves of the armchair, side table, lamp and bed frame all intersecting to create something quite special. A sign that curves are going nowhere this year – they're just getting a tad more tailored, a little more refined. Lilas bed; H2O armchair; Selce table; Bolle Tavolo 1 lamp, prices on request, all Gallotti&Radice
